OFFICIAL DISPATCHES.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—12.5 A. M.

To Major General Dix:

This Department has just received the following telegram announcing the continued pursuit of the rebels by Sheridan. Cedar Creek, which Sheridan was crossing yesterday at 6 in the afternoon, is a short distance this side of Strasburg. He had pursued the enemy over thirty miles from the point where he attacked them at daylight on Monday:

HARPER'S FERRY, Sept. 21, 1864.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton:

Reliable news from the front states that our army was crossing Cedar Creek yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock. There were no rebels in sight.

The following list of rebel General Killed and wounded is correct: Gens. Rhodes, Ramseur, Gordon, Terry, Goodwin, Bradley Johnson and Pinckney Lee.

From all I can learn, the number of prisoners will approximate to 5,000.

The indications are that the rebels will not make a stand short of Staunton. They are evidently too much demoralized to make a fight.

JNO. D. STEVENSON, Brig. Gen.

General Grant transmits the following extract from the Richmond Sentinel of yesterday:

A slight ripple of excitement was produced here yesterday by the report, that a raiding party was advancing on Gordonsville, and were within a few miles of that place. The result of all our inquiries on this head is, that early yesterday a party of Yankees, whose numbers are unknown, visited the Rapidan bridge, and after destroying it proceeded to Liberty Mills, five or six miles above, where they also destroyed. From the latter place they are believed to have gone back to Culpepper.

The operations alluded to by the Richmond Sentinel, was by a force sent out previous to the battle of Monday. (Signed.) E. M. STANTON,
Sec. of War.

FROM CINCINNATI.

The Draft—Feeling of the People in Relation to Sheridan's Victory.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

CINCINNATI, Wednesday, Sept. 21, 1864.

The draft passed off peaceably in this city; very little feeling is manifested, and no show of resistance.

When Stanton's bulletin announcing Sheridan's victory was posted on the bulletin boards an incredulous Irishman was seen to shake his head and mutter "It's a d—d lie, a d—d Lincoln lie to injure McClellan." That fairly reflects the feelings of the Copperheads here about the splendid news.

The city has been lively with flags all day, and loyal men are ecstatic. Extensive preparations are being made for a Union demonstration on Saturday night.

It is positively ascertained that Ex-Secretary Chase will address the people.

Military News—Rebel Advices—General Items.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

WASHINGTON Wednesday, Sept. 21, 1864.

FROM GRANT'S ARMY.

Advices from Grant's army are to yesterday morning. There is a good deal of sharp skirmishing in our extreme left, and both armies are spotting ready for battle at an hour's notice. The rebels are supposed to have a design to cut the new railroad from City Point, but are not likely to be gratified.

REBEL NEWS.

Concerning the situation south of Petersburg, the Richmond Enquirer of last Saturday has the following: "For three days past the enemy has been managing to effect an expansion of their right wing, and, if possible, to seize the Vaughan road. If battle has consequently been expected, and rumors now current in Petersburg are each day anticipating the event at an early hour.

"On Thursday morning, Warren's 6th corps of Yankees having left their works in the vicinity of the Weldon railroad, advanced, and broke through Gen. Butler's lines at Poplar Spring Church.

"Col. D. D. Fitzrebe commanding Gen. Dearing's brigade, met them, and after fighting them for some hours with varying success, finally repulsed them, inflicting considerable loss."

"It is enemy succeeded in reaching Pop ar Spring Church, and threw up breastworks at that point, but were compelled to abandon them. Our loss was small. Sheridan reported himself killed and wounded, and a number of prisoners. These prisoners stated that this movement was an attempt to get between our left flank and Richmond."

FROM MADISON.

Enthusiastic Union Meeting—Military Matters.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

MADISON, Wis., Wednesday, Sept. 21.

The Union mass meeting here to-day is a magnificent success. A large and most enthusiastic crowd was present this afternoon, including representatives from all parts of the country. The lowest estimate of the number present is three thousand.

The sick and wounded veterans in Harvey Hospital, who were able, many of them on crutches, marched down in fine style, led by Hospital Steward Brooks, but lately a warm admirer of McClellan, with war-worn flags and Lincoln and Johnson banners.

Hon. Dave Atwood presided. Hon. John Wentworth made a most telling effort, no synopsis of which could do it justice. He said the Union was on fire, and the conflagration must be extinguished at all hazards.

Senator Doolittle made a most effective speech, giving conclusive reasons why loyal men should not vote for McClellan, and giving Gen. Cutler's testimony that the rebel soldiers, at along the lines in front of Petersburg, cheered for McClellan when they heard of his nomination.

Cannon fired and there was excellent music from bands and glee clubs. The spirit of the meeting was most encouraging. Many soldiers were present, and none so warmly applauded the speakers.

To-night, another large meeting is going on at Capital Park, which is lighted with blazing tar and Union lanterns, presenting a brilliant appearance. Excellent speeches are being made by Wentworth, Doolittle and others.

Most enthusiastic cheers are given for Lincoln and Johnson, the Union, and Sheridan, over whose great victory Union men are jubilant, and for which salutes have been fired.

Five companies of the 39th regiment, under Col. Burtuff, leave for the Potomac army to-morrow forenoon.

Military officers work day and night to get men ready for the field. Company Bands D of the 40th regiment have been paid off, and some others are mustered out but not yet paid.

FROM SPRINGFIELD.

Dedication of the Union Wigwam—Draft in Woodford County—Copperhead Nominate Anthony Thornton for 10th Congressional District.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Wednesday, Sept. 21.

There is a perfect jam at the dedication of the Union Wigwam to-night. Not one half the crowd can get in doors. The Union ladies of Springfield had beautifully decorated it with evergreen, mottoes and Chinese lanterns. On the front of the platform are the words "Abe and Andy," "Oglesby and Bross," in large letters. At the sides, on the railing and galleries, are the words, "The Union—it must and shall be preserved," and "United we stand, divided we fall." The building is lighted with gas.

In the absence of Gens. Palmer and Prentiss, Gov. Yates will probably address the crowd.

The Board of Supervisors of this county have appropriated $1,000 for volunteer bounties, to pay at the rate of three hundred dollars each for twenty-seven substitutes, which the county is deficient.

Provost Marshal Keys drew sixty-four names from Woodford county, in the sub-district consisting of the towns of Green and Panola. The best of feeling prevails, and the county seems to be with a determination to respond to the draft or bring substitutes. This sub-district was drawn by Uncle Jesse Dubois, with enthusiastic vote of the crowd present, among whom were some of the leading citizens of Woodford County.

There will probably be no draft to-morrow, the Marshal being in doubt as to whether he will give recruits a chance to fill up by volunteering, when they are making strong efforts to do. Among the draft of Saturday will be two enrolling officers, G. McCoy and Wm. G. Wood, and W. Schaefer, of Metamora, a Methodist Preacher, Noel B. Mead, ex-Sheriff of Woodford County.

In the 11th Congressional District at a Copperhead convention, which met at Carlinville yesterday, Anthony Thornton was nominated for Congress. He was then fifty-seven hundred majority. His opponents were Hodges, of Greene County; Spier, of Macoupin; Beal, of Scott; Vandeveer, of Christian, and Kinney, of Jersey. The house men are not at all pleased at the result, as Thornton is a new convert to the extreme peace doctrines, being her-tofore a quasi War Democrat. Like McCormick, of Cook County, however, he is rich, and that is the reason he is now in Copperhead Congressional nominations.

FROM PHILADELPHIA.

The Great Victory in the Shenandoah—Matters Military and Political.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

PHILADELPHIA, Wednesday, Sept. 21.

Further details of Gen. Sheridan's splendid victory over Early, continue to reach us. It is now known that the presence of General Grant in the middle division, was immediately connected with this movement, which has proved such a grand success to our arms.

On Sunday night, after Grant's visit, Sheridan ordered an advance along the whole line of his army, which then lay from Winchester over the country in the neighborhood of Berryville.

They soon found the rebels and the grand battle began. A large number of wagons with eight days rations for our army have left Harper's Ferry and are now on their way to the front. This would seem to indicate that Sheridan intends pushing the flying rebels until they reach Lee.

There has been great rejoicing here among all loyal men since the announcement of this victory.

To-night at the Copperhead Keystone Club, while Hon. Jas. McKibbin, of California, was speaking, he happened to make an allusion to the glorious victory. It fell like a wet blanket on his audience, and two loyal men who were reporters tried to raise an applause, but there was no response from the audience.

The Copperhead party is becoming thoroughly organized for the coming campaign. We are to have a torchlight procession and other demonstrations, which at 1000 did so much to elect Mr. Lincoln.

FROM MILWAUKEE.

Glorious Reception of General Paine—Speeches on the Occasion.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 21st, 1864.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

The reception of Gen. Halbert E. Paine, the Union nominee for this Congressional District, at the Academy of Music, was a most enthusiastic one. Long before the hour set for the opening of the meeting the house was crowded from parquette to gallery.

The meeting was organized by electing Colonel Geo. H. Walker, President, who after a few eartest remarks, presented General Paine to the audience amid long and continued demonstrations of enthusiastic welcome

Gen. Paine spoke for more than an hour, and his speech was replete with the most clear and convincing arguments, tearing up separately the planks of the Chicago platform, and showing in a most forcible manner the disastrous results which would inevitably follow from an armistice with the rebels. His remarks in regard to the resolution in which the Democracy offer to give sympathies and protection to the soldiers of the Union, brought down the house.

Gen. Paine was followed by Ex-Governor Solomon, who spoke with his usual eloquence and earnestness.

At this hour, ten o'clock, the meeting has not adjourned.

FROM ROCK ISLAND.

A Jubilation of Loyal Men.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

ROCK ISLAND, Wednesday, Sept. 21.

The Union men of this city had a grand celebration to-night on the news of Sheridan's victories. A fine band was on the ground, bonfires were lighted, the cannon blazed forth its thundering notes, and the people cheered until their voices failed them. Speeches were made by Dr. Truesdale, J. B. Hawley, Judge Wilkinson, Webster H. C. Blackburn, an old line Democrat, and N. Belcher, ditto. Everybody enjoyed themselves, and there was a general refreshing.

FROM SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.

The Great Union Rally in Fulton County.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

LEWISTON, Ill., Wednesday, Sept. 21.

In Lewistown to-day, the shire town of Fulton county, the home of Ross, the Copperhead member of Congress from the 9th Congressional district, and on the borders of Secker Egypt, there was held a grand Union mass meeting. The whole city was decorated and enthusiasm manifested took everybody by surprise. A good time was expected, but no one looked for three thousand people. The free that have burned so fiercely in the Center and Northern portions of the State, have smouldered here, and they will burn brighter and fiercer until November.

The Union men of this section are confident they will be able not only to reach the vote of —ood, but wipe the them Democratic majority and triumph and place Old Fulton with the other portions of Illinois. So certain are they of success that they state that they will return Fullerton to Congress to pass on Ross, the present incumbent. These are of no victory that would more rejoice Union hearts all over the land than the promised one in the old Ninth Congressional District, unless it be that other promised victory in the old thirteenth district.

The meeting to-day was, like that of its predecessors, distinguished by music, banners and processions. It was held in a beautiful grove south of the village, the principal locality where Lincoln and Douglas held their great joint discussion in 1858. The meeting was addressed by Col. Thomas J. Henderson, McDowell, of Logan, Col. Strawbridge, of Galesburg, and Judge Scott, of Lewistown. After a song by the Lewistown glee club, Major Gen. Ogilvie, from the Shenandoah Valley, Major Gen. Ogilvie was introduced, and in the most soul-stirring speech of an hour, he was one of the most telling and powerful expositions of the pending issues that has ever been delivered in the present canvass. The people were evidently in sympathy with him, and most rapturously applauded him very heroically throughout his address.

A man named H. G. Boston, of Astoria, Fulton county, a Democrat, became rabid, and endeavored to charge them with falsehood. One of the crowd promptly knocked him down. A smart fight ensued, and the copperhead after being roughly handled, was compelled to take refuge among a lot of women. To this fact, and the determination of the sensible men in the audience, that there should be no disturbance, Mr. Benton was indebted for his freedom from serious personal injury.

Those who are accustomed to attend only those Union meetings in the northern part of the State, cannot appreciate the bitterness of the canvass in Egypt.

Gen. Oglesby was followed by Gen. Prentiss, and he by Judge A. R. C. Coates, the former indulging in appeals and invective, and the latter in statement. Each was perfect in his particular views.

FROM INDIANPOLIS.

Funeral of Lt. Col. Meikel—A "Greek Fire" Captain in Trouble—A Substitute Broker Drafted—A Proposed New Hotel.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

INDIANAPOLIS, Wednesday, Sept. 21, 1864.

The funeral of Lieut. Col. Geo. W. Meikel, of the 20th Indiana, who was killed near Petersburg a few days ago, took place to-day. A military escort consisting of six companies of the 17th veteran reserve corps, under command of Lieut. Col. Gardner, accompanied the remains to their 18th resting place. The hearse was decorated with the national colors, which were draped in mourning, as were also the colors of the escort. Col. Meikel had many friends in the city, and his loss is deeply felt.

A man calling himself Capt. R. C. Beckling, was arrested at the Bates House yesterday, by order of Gen Hovey. He has been in the city for some days exhibiting a patent Greek-fire shell of which he claims to be the inventor. It is charged that he is to complicity with the enemies of the Government—that his mission here is to act in concert with the Sons of Liberty. Since his error a handbill has been circulated in which to swamp his tracks he pretences to have authority to raise a Greek-fire battery from this State. Any military commission now in session will probably investigate the matter.

The draft is still the great excitement of the hour. The victims already selected are in the city to-day from all the various round about, bidding for substitutes. The price ranges from $700 to $1,000.

A well known substitute broker from one of the suburban townships, who has made considerable money in the business, drew a prize in the wheel yesterday. The best of the joke is, he cannot get any substitute for himself, though he offers big figures.

Efforts are being made to clear the city from the draft entirely, and it will probably be done.

Capt. John C. Palmer has been promoted to the Majority of the 58th regiment, vice William M. Boyd, killed.

Certain capitalists are reported to be in the city, desirous of obtaining an eligible site for the erection of a first class hotel. Such an institution is much needed here, and there is no doubt the investment would yield prompt and paying returns.

FROM KALAMAZOO.

Michigan State Fair—Awards—Sanitary Fair—Sheridan.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

KALAMAZOO, Wednesday, Sept. 21, 1864.

The State Agricultural Fair opened this a.m. under more favorable aspects than appearances promised yesterday. The weather is beautiful, and the roads and track in excellent condition.

Agricultural implements make a "fine show," but they run largely to reapers and mowers. Separate and combined they number in the grand counting up about thirty. Horse-power saws are also a prominent feature; ditto monkey and negro shows, with a large sprinkling of cheap jewelry and lottery dealers. The committees have been busy to-day in examining horses, stock, implements, fancy articles, etc., preparatory to making their awards, which will be all completed to-morrow.

The attendance to-day is larger than ever before on the second day, and the fair as a whole promises to be a success financially and otherwise.

Chicago exhibitors make a good show here, as they did at Decatur last week.

Chicago men have very liberally endowed the Fair from infancy in matters musical. Root & Cady have some superb Bradbury pianos here. Reed, of the Temple of Music, has taken the Fair by storm. He has fifteen first class pianos and several of the celebrated Mason & Hamlin organs on exhibition. To crown all, he has donated a five hundred dollar instrument to the Sanitary Fair, which is being held in connection with the Agricultural Fair, and which cannot prove other than a great success. Mr. Reed has a host of friends in Michigan, and reflects high credit on his liberality and patriotism. Your Chicago readers will remember the share he bore in the donations to the great Sanitary Fair in Chicago.

To-morrow and Friday will be the great days for the million, as they will be devoted to the fast crabs running and travelling. There are a number of carrier pigeons here, and race sport is anticipated. The Michigan Central Railroad, State Agricultural Society, is here, and receives much attention from the officers of the Michigan Society.

SHERIDAN'S VICTORY.

Sheridan's splendid victory in the Shenandoah Valley has given a warm and healthy glow to the face of the immense crowds of loyal men gathered here to-day, while the few McClellanites present looked sick and sad.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA.

Latest from Grant's Army—The Reported Strength of Lee.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Sept. 21—Information from the Potomac is to the effect that nothing of importance has occurred since the battle of three days. The attack of the enemy expected on Monday did not take place, although from indications it is believed the rebels seriously meditated an assault. Scarcely a shot had been heard along the lines since Monday.

Numbers of deserters were coming in daily, but they brought no news.

We are to have now to the men whom Grant has ridiculed. Let him see that the cradle and the grave are not to be robbed. Let him see that our old men and our boys have hearts and steady hands, and will easily rout the Hessians, in defense of our homes.

The Enquirer of the same date, says "we are of the opinion that the next great battle will be fought on the north side of the James, and that it will be the bloodiest conflicts that this war has witnessed, and that immediately afterward, Richmond will be the theater of the conflict. Are our people prepared for it?"

Let the citizens of Richmond and Petersburg look at the enormous contrast now being inflicted on the people of Atlanta, and there will not be a man too old or a boy too young, to resist our enemies, gun in hand and true to their veterans in courage. Let the people of our communities call to mind the oppression, the humiliation and imprisonment which befell our people when once secure within the enemy's lines, and they will have a powerful motive in the present crisis to nerve them in resisting their dear old States at all hazards from the yoke of the tyrant.

NEW YORK, Wednesday, Sept. 21.—The World's Washington special, 20th, says:

Messengers who have arrived by mail steamer from City Point report that several engagements between the two armies was considered imminent when they left. Heavy skirmishing and artillery firing was in progress near the Weldon road on Sunday. It is generally believed here that a grand engagement will occur on the south side of Petersburg on Monday or to day. It has been well known here for some time that Gen. Grant was bringing up all the troops that could be spared available in order to strengthen his left. It is now thought Gen. Grant's plan has been to so strengthen his forces as to guard his lines of communications to the Weldon road, so that he could swing the main body of the army around so as to effectually strike the rear of Lee's army, and thus force him to fight or surrender.

The meeting to-day was, like that of its predecessors, distinguished by music, banners and processions. It was held in a beautiful grove south of the village, the principal locality where Lincoln and Douglas held their great joint discussion in 1858. The meeting was addressed by Col. Thomas J. Efforts are being made to clear the city from the draft entirely, and it will probably be done.

Capt. John C. Palmer has been promoted to the Majority of the 58th regiment, vice William M. Boyd, killed.

Certain capitalists are reported to be in the city, desirous of obtaining an eligible site for the erection of a first class hotel. Such an institution is much needed here, and there is no doubt the investment would yield prompt and paying returns.

FROM KALAMAZOO.

Michigan State Fair—Awards—Sanitary Fair—Sheridan.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

KALAMAZOO, Wednesday, Sept. 21, 1864.

The State Agricultural Fair opened this a.m. under more favorable aspects than appearances promised yesterday. The weather is beautiful, and the roads and track in excellent condition.

Agricultural implements make a "fine show," but they run largely to reapers and mowers. Separate and combined they number in the grand counting up about thirty. Horse-power saws are also a prominent feature; ditto monkey and negro shows, with a large sprinkling of cheap jewelry and lottery dealers. The committees have been busy to-day in examining horses, stock, implements, fancy articles, etc., preparatory to making their awards, which will be all completed to-morrow.

The attendance to-day is larger than ever before on the second day, and the fair as a whole promises to be a success financially and otherwise.

Chicago exhibitors make a good show here, as they did at Decatur last week.

Chicago men have very liberally endowed the Fair from infancy in matters musical. Root & Cady have some superb Bradbury pianos here. Reed, of the Temple of Music, has taken the Fair by storm. He has fifteen first class pianos and several of the celebrated Mason & Hamlin organs on exhibition. To crown all, he has donated a five hundred dollar instrument to the Sanitary Fair, which is being held in connection with the Agricultural Fair, and which cannot prove other than a great success. Mr. Reed has a host of friends in Michigan, and reflects high credit on his liberality and patriotism. Your Chicago readers will remember the share he bore in the donations to the great Sanitary Fair in Chicago.

To-morrow and Friday will be the great days for the million, as they will be devoted to the fast crabs running and travelling. There are a number of carrier pigeons here, and race sport is anticipated. The Michigan Central Railroad, State Agricultural Society, is here, and receives much attention from the officers of the Michigan Society.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA.

Latest from Grant's Army—The Reported Strength of Lee.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Sept. 21—Information from the Potomac is to the effect that nothing of importance has occurred since the battle of three days. The attack of the enemy expected on Monday did not take place, although from indications it is believed the rebels seriously meditated an assault. Scarcely a shot had been heard along the lines since Monday.

Numbers of deserters were coming in daily, but they brought no news.

We are to have now to the men whom Grant has ridiculed. Let him see that the cradle and the grave are not to be robbed. Let him see that our old men and our boys have hearts and steady hands, and will easily rout the Hessians, in defense of our homes.

The Enquirer of the same date, says "we are of the opinion that the next great battle will be fought on the north side of the James, and that it will be the bloodiest conflicts that this war has witnessed, and that immediately afterward, Richmond will be the theater of the conflict. Are our people prepared for it?"

Let the citizens of Richmond and Petersburg look at the enormous contrast now being inflicted on the people of Atlanta, and there will not be a man too old or a boy too young, to resist our enemies, gun in hand and true to their veterans in courage. Let the people of our communities call to mind the oppression, the humiliation and imprisonment which befell our people when once secure within the enemy's lines, and they will have a powerful motive in the present crisis to nerve them in resisting their dear old States at all hazards from the yoke of the tyrant.

NEW YORK, Wednesday, Sept. 21.—The World's Washington special, 20th, says:

Messengers who have arrived by mail steamer from City Point report that several engagements between the two armies was considered imminent when they left. Heavy skirmishing and artillery firing was in progress near the Weldon road on Sunday. It is generally believed here that a grand engagement will occur on the south side of Petersburg on Monday or to day. It has been well known here for some time that Gen. Grant was bringing up all the troops that could be spared available in order to strengthen his left. It is now thought Gen. Grant's plan has been to so strengthen his forces as to guard his lines of communications to the Weldon road, so that he could swing the main body of the army around so as to effectually strike the rear of Lee's army, and thus force him to fight or surrender.

THE WAR IN GEORGIA.

Sherman's Letter to the Rebel Hood—A Hit per ear Dear Southern Brethren and Their Northern Allies.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Sept. 21.

The following is the reply of General Sherman to General Hood's charge of studied and unparalleled cruelty, and which was received in Washington to-day:

HEADQUARTERS MIL. DIV. OF THE MISS.,
IN THE FIELD, ATLANTA, Sept

Chicago Tribune.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1864.

HEAR, HEAR, HEAD!

WASHINGTON HUNT'S RESOLUTION AS PRESENTED TO THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION:

Resolved, That in the future, as in the past, we will adhere with unwavering fidelity to the Union, under the Constitution, as [the only solid foundation of our strength, security and happiness as a people, and as a framework of government equally conducive to the welfare and prosperity of all the States, both Northern and Southern.

WASHINGTON HUNT'S RESOLUTION AS ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION:

Resolved That in the future, as in the past, we will adhere with unwavering fidelity to the Union, under the Constitution, as [the only solid foundation of our strength, security and happiness as a people, and as a framework of government equally conducive to the welfare and prosperity of all the States, both Northern and Southern.

We think some of our Democratic friends are in danger of forgetting their own platform. They will be obliged to us, therefore, for keeping the first resolution of their party creed standing a few days, and giving it an occasional insertion in a conspicuous place "till after election." We accordingly print Washington Hunt's resolution as it was introduced in the Chicago Convention, and the same resolution as it was adopted by the Convention. The place where "the words "insist on maintaining the national unity," were stricken out by the Convention is for convenience marked by two brackets. Will our Democratic friends tell us why those were omitted? Don't all speak at once.

THE FALL CAMPAIGN.

The fall campaign has been fairly opened by Sheridan's important victory in the valley of the Shenandoah, which is the more gratifying from the fact that the Shenandoah has been heretofore an almost fatal battle-ground for us. There Albert Sidney Johnston hoodwinked our Copperhead General, Patterson, so as to detach the forces of the latter at Martinsburg when they should have been reinforcing McDowell, while the former marched to the aid of Beauregard, and so defeated us at Bull Run. In the Shenandoah, by their superior knowledge of the mountain barriers, with their gaps, fastnesses, favorable routes for advance, positions for defense, and lines of retreat, aided by the secret sympathies of the white population, Stonewall Jackson, Ewell and Longstreet have gained their notoriety at the expense of Banks, Milroy, Fremont and others. Down the Shenandoah they poured upon Harper's Ferry and Maryland Heights, capturing fifteen thousand men while McClellan was fighting the barren struggle for Antietam bridge and creek, and up the Shenandoah and Blue Ridge Valleys they retired. So of the Pennsylvania and Maryland invasions. In fact the Blue Ridge has been the most effective intrenchment the rebels have got behind, and the Shenandoah Valley their great highway. It is because of the general consciousness of the advantages they seem always to have possessed there, that Sheridan's opening success is specially gratifying. It not only whips the rebels handsomely, but dispels an evil omen, consecrating to victory a battle scene hitherto associated with reverses. Its effect upon our troops will be to inspire that enthusiasm and confidence so essential to military success.

Mean while Sheridan's victory must be regarded as but the opening of the fall campaign. Fully ten weeks of the finest campaigning weather of the year are now before us. The result of Grant's late visit to Sheridan proves that he intends to use them to the utmost advantage. A vigorous and determined effort will be made within this period to finish up the rebellion and put it out of its misery. It has arrived at a stage where it can neither surrender nor sustain itself by fighting. It cannot surrender, because those who organized it have conferred upon it no power of surrender. Defeat heems it in on all sides. It has not the power to sustain that rebellious government which controls it, and which it must sustain so long as it shall sustain anything. It is therefore too weak to live, and too cowardly to die. The strong hand that puts the monster out of its misery, and restores Union and peace, will receive the blessing due to the peace maker. Shall the coming ten weeks close the record of our Nation's glorious struggle with victory, or bring upon us defeat, disaster, the dissolution of the Union, the suspension of the existence of the Government of the United States, a war of factions and parties, beginning with public repudiation and private disaster, and ending in a career of bloody revolutions, civil disorders, and a reign of terror such as has found an example only in the darkest days of the French Revolution? Whether we will have the former or the latter, depends, in the candid opinions of our ablest military men, upon whether we will promptly, speedily, and efficiently, enforce the draft.

THE DEBT TO McCORMICK.

That debt to Cyrus H. McCormick, of which the Times talks, on the part of the farmers of the West, is a thing difficult to be seen, for two reasons, other than have been named. One is, that supposing his reaper to have been the first one invented, and to have been all that its proprietor claimed for it, he has been pretty well paid for his share of the effort in supplying it. The cost of building the first machine for many years, was not far from thirty dollars—going sometimes a little above that figure, and sometimes a little below it. Its cost to the farmer during this time, was from one hundred to one hundred and twenty dollars. Now it is competent for artisans, inventors and merchants, to set their own prices upon their own goods; and we do not arraign Mr. McCormick for the high price—or high profits—of his machine. Our point is, that his claim to gratitude, on the score of service rendered, claimed for him by the Times, cannot stand. He has long since overcome farmers think overpaid—for his labor, capital, and services of all sorts. It may have been a good thing for the farmer to buy his implement, even at a high price—better at least to than to cut his grain with the cradles. So may it be a good thing for a man in debt to borrow money, even though he pays ten per cent. per month for it, and to get rid of the creditor who has him by the throat; but when the money shaver, who has cut him in two, comes upon him for a vote of thanks, or a silver pitcher, in addition, as a token of his gratitude, there is an involuntary twitching of the muscles that line the toe of his boot. He may go with his usury; but as to gratuities in addition—

The reason which stands in the way of any special rendering of gratitude to C. H. McCormick, is, that as a matter of fact, he has been an injury rather than a benefit, in this matter of reaping by machinery. He came to the West and set up the manufacture of a very poor implement. It was improved from time to time, and at last, largely through the efforts or others; but it forever stood in the way of better machines; and its vender stood in the way of more ingenious and enterprising men than himself. His priority of time gave him an advantage which he never lost. He made money, with which to brow-beat and fight, with lawsuits, other men who had better implements than his own; and thus he was enabled to keep them back and even to shut them out of the market. Had C. H. McCormick never blessed the West with his presence, we should have had more and better reaping and mowing machines than we now have. His impediment was just about good enough to go; and he was more indebted to his rivals for the improvements made upon it than to his own invention. He has succeeded by his money? which, well gained by principal and established, was a manufacturer—and by that political management of which every Virginian is supposed to possess a share.

We do not care to go into these matters, however, any further than to show the absurdity of the claim set up by the Times, that in obligation of payment for services not rewarded, on the part of Mr. McCormick. There is more to be said if it is called forth. The Times had better keep a little shady with its candidates.

NORTHWESTERN CONFEDERACY.

Ever since Mr. Mallandigham introduced his resolutions in the Ohio Legislature, to favor of four independent confederacies, the idea of building up a Northwestern Confederacy on the ruins of the old Union has been floating about in many disloyal brains in this section. The resolution adopted by the Chicago Convention—looking to the establishment of "one or more leagues with the Federal States," instead of the Federal Union, undoubtedly had some reference to the scheme. More recently the "Sons of Liberty," as they call themselves, (Brothers of Slavery is their proper appellation), in the State of Indiana, have taken hold of it in earnest. They have issued a pamphlet of nine pages which they are circulating extensively not only in Indiana but in Michigan and Illinois, and perhaps elsewhere, presenting all the treasonable arguments they can invent in favor of a Northwestern Confederacy. The pamphlet says: "The immediate purpose of the Sons of Liberty and the Democracy are identical." This is undoubtedly true; and we discover also that, as their purposes are the same, so are their modes of propagating their faith identical, to wit: disavowing any intention to excite the Union, and then urging all the treasonable step on which to reason why it should be done. That is the whole of the scheme in a nut shell. Read the following quotation from the pamphlet quoted, consisting of stringing a poem thickens, and then pretending to be very violently bent upon prosecuting the war.

We publish the argument of the "Sons of Liberty" in favor of a Northwestern Confederacy, in another column. We do so, not for the purpose of exposing the outrageous falsehoods which it contains, but to warn the people of the ulterior purposes of that most shameless and abandoned organization, misnamed the Democratic party, whose principles are "identical" with those of the Sons of Liberty. Disruption of the Union, not only by the separation of the North from the South, but by the division of the East from the West, and the Atlantic from the Pacific, is their fixed intention. State rights, as Mr. Calhoun propounded and as Mr. Pendleton now endorses and advocates the doctrine—the right of each State to secede whenever it chooses—is the cardinal feature of their party creed. The "basis of the Federal States," which is the declared policy of the party in their proposed negotiations of peace with the rebels, means the basis of each State's right to Independence. In striking out of Washington Hunt's resolution the words "insist on maintaining the nation al unity," they struck out, so far as they were able, the only bond which holds us together as a nation, and gives us a place among the foremost powers of the earth. A Northwestern Confederacy could not sustain ten years, for the very principle of its being would be the right of Michigan to answer herself to Canada, and the right of Missouri to join the Confederate States, upon any real or fabcied provocation, any real or fancied commercial advantage. The end would be general dissolution, and a lapse into the contemptible attitude of the contending American republics, or the German Duchies.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN ON GEN. McCLELLAN.

The Copperhead papers are parading two notes of thanks to McClellan written by President Lincoln. The first was addressed to the letters:

WASHINGTON, July 7, 1862.

Major General George B. McClellan:

I am satisfied that yourself, officers and men have done the best you could. All accounts say better fighting was never done. Ten thousand thanks for it.

A. LINCOLN.

WASHINGTON, July 8, 1862.

Major General George B. McClellan, Commanding Army of the Potomac:

A thousand thanks for the relief your two divisions of sad [yesterday afternoon brought me. Be assured the heroism of yourself, officers and men is, and forever will be, appreciated.

A. LINCOLN.

But the Little Mackerel papers take good care to conceal the important fact that this approval was based on McClellan's own statement of what he had done! Nobody ever doubted that General's capacity of apologizing for his performances. Mr. Lincoln, not then taught by experience, was generous enough to accept McClellan's representations as truthful. But let the subsequent evidence show how much balm there was for gratitude to McClellan. We quote from the report of the Committee on the Conduct of the War, touching the operations for which McClellan in his dispatches to the President, claimed so much credit:

"The retreat to the James River having been decided upon, the army took up its march, being attacked by the enemy in many lines, and however successful in repelling those attacks, exhausting their positions during the night. The actions of, Savage's Station, Glendale and Malvern were fought during the movement of the army to the James, the enemy being repulsed in each day's fighting, and our army falling back under orders, during the night.

"It would appear, from all the information your Committee can obtain, that the battles were fought, the troops handled, new dispositions made and old ones changed, entirely by the Corps Commanders, without directions from the Commanding General, the whole time of the latter being occupied in getting the field, and seek the position for the next day, giving no directions until the close of the day's fighting, when the troops would be ordered to fall back during the night to the new positions selected by him. In that manner the army reached the James River."

If the President had known the politroon conduct of McClellan during that unnecessary retreat, does any one suppose that he would have thanked him for what he had not he performed? The less the Copperheads have to say about these testimonials, obtained by fraudulent representations, the better for their little Mackerel.

☞ Gen. McClellan, in his Harrison Landing letter to the President, July, 1862, says:

In this contest it has become necessary to crush a population distinguished for its energy, intelligence and warlike to constitute a nation. We have not only to arrest their armed and organized forces in the field, but to follow them to their homes, and there as will convince all our antagonists, especially those of the present generation, of the folly, the crime, of the utter impossibility of resistance.

The above passage will be found on page 107 of Hillard's Life of McClellan. How can any Copperhead support for President the man who utters such sentiments, and at the same time denounce Mr. Lincoln for acting on this very doctrine? McClellan words the idea a little stronger than Republicans are in the habit of doing. He declares that "it has become necessary to crush a people," &c. "sufficiently numerous, intelligent and warlike to constitute a nation." If this is not the essence of military coercion what is? Will some Cop. explain wherein McClellan's method of dealing with the Southern brethren is more lenient than Old Abe's?

We respectfully submit that while Copperheads are supporting the writer of the "population" theory of the war, they cannot consistently pinch in without regard to the sensitiveness of his own record. These two kinds of property they esteem free plunder, and accordingly

THE CITY.

GRAND UNION CELEBRATION.

THE GREAT VICTORY OF GEN. SHERIDAN —AT BRYAN HALL THIS EVENING.

Major Gen. Schofield, Hon. B. C. Cook, Hon. B. Edgerton, Colonel Osborn, Colonel Jonston, C. C. Bates, C. H. Hawley, Dr. Tiffany, and Others.

Rally to Bryan Hall this evening. Let the victory in the Valley of the Shenandoah be celebrated. Major Gen. Schofield, from the battle fields of Atlanta, is in the city, and has promised to be present, and address the meeting.

Other able and eloquent speakers have been invited, and will be present, among whom are Hon. B. C. Cook of Ottawa, Hon. Benj. G. Ingersoll of Peoria, Col. Osborn of the Tenth Illinois, Col. Jonston, Geo. C. Bates, C. H. Hawley, Dr. Tiffany, and others.

The Lumbards, and a brass band, will discourse music. Our armies are advancing upon victorious battle fields, and the loyal everywhere are rejoicing. Let the flags be thrown out, the cannon made to speak, and rockets and fireworks illumine the sky. The western patriots are on fire, and the whole nation is awakening to crush the rebellion. Now is the time to work, and to strike heavy crushing blows against treason and traitors. If you want a place in the Hall, go early.

CORONER.—Dr. R. A. Ballard is a candidate for the Union nomination for coroner of this county.

FIRE.—The alarm of fire which called out the Department on Saturday afternoon, was caused by the breaking of a small tenement on Madison street beyond the city limits.

PERSONAL.—Maj. Gen. Schofield, of the 23d Army Corps, Brig. Gen Ruger, Brig. Gen. Campbell, of the regular army, and Col. Scandrid, of Gen. Schofield's staff, are now stopping at the Sherman House.

—RATIFICATION MEETING.—A grand ratification meeting will be held on Saturday evening next at Metropolitan Hall, to ratify the nominations for Sheriff, Coroner, Surveyor, Attorney, Clerk, and Col. Daniels of Wisconsin, will be present, and with other able speakers, will address the meeting.

RIVER ACCIDENT.—A canal boat, lying in the South Branch, between Madison street bridge, was run into by a passing tug, yesterday, and so severely injured, that the boat was discharging a cargo of wheat in it with the utmost difficulty that she was kept afloat.

PERSONAL.—Capt. W. B. Curtis, A. A. G., 1st. Brigade, 3d Division, 14th Army Corps,—better known as "Turchin's Brigade"—arrived in town yesterday morning, direct from Atlanta. His many friends will be pleased to learn that the Captain is in good health and spirits, notwithstanding the hardships of the four campaigns he has passed through.

DESERVED PROMOTION.—Lieut George J. Robinson, of the Chicago Board of Trade Battery, has received the appointment of Captain of the battery, to date from September 1st. Capt. Robinson has participated in all the battles of the Army of the Cumberland but proved himself a gallant and energetic officer, one well worthy of promotion.

DECLINED.—The proposition of the Pittsburg and Fort Wayne Railroad Company, recon ly made to the city authorities, to vacate so much of Adams street as lies between the river and Canal street, in consideration of the sum of $37,500, which the Company agreed to pay, has been declined by the Committee to whom it was referred.

CASHED.—It has been decided by the Citizens' War Committee that any person drafted and holding $300 or less of the County War Fund bonds shall receive the principal and interest credited on the Committee in incurring the County War Committee to redeem the bond in cash. This will all the holders of such bonds to turn it into cash to assist him in the procuration of a substitute.

LARCENY.—Detectives Sherman and Abbott last night arrested two men, named William Blain and David Thompson, charged with the larceny of $100 in money from Solomon Shiller. Shiller, who was enlisted by Thompson and Blain, and, instead of paying him the lawful bounty, they put it into their pockets to help themselves. Shiller is present if he could identify the prisoners.

THE LOST BOYS, and a brass band, still discourse music. Our armies are advancing upon victorious battle fields, and the loyal everywhere are rejoicing. Let the flags be thrown out, the cannon made to speak, and rockets and fireworks illumine the sky. The western patriots are on fire, and the whole nation is awakening to crush the rebellion. VETERAN RESERVE CORPS.—From Sept. 1st to Sept. 16th, 106 men were sworn into the Veteran Reserve Corps at Provost Marshal James' office.

Capt. Bjerg, as previously reported in the Tribune, has been promoted to the military command of the Soldiers' Rest. To-day it will transfer the men to the Rest, and shortly will also move his office to the Rest, preparatory to continuing on to occupy his old quarters on Randolph street, No. 46.

RESCUED.—Yesterday information was given to Officer Clayton, that a little girl, apparently about twelve years of age, was in a disreputable house on Clark street, and he at once took measures to rescue her from the den of infamy, either through incompetency or mismanagement, the history of the Sherman Hotel Valley had been a dark spot on our National escutcheon. It has been on several occasions the seat of war for a long or short period, and terrible deeds have been perpetrated during substantial truths. We have had magnificent retreats—and as Banks' "Red River" campaign history. In fact the same Shenandoah stood "a right smart chance" to use Southern points, of which the history of the valley of its somewhat lengthy essay, but when we find a professedly loyal journal laying great stress upon the circumstance that there was a water route to Richmond, and that it would have been easy for Gen. Grant to have put his army down at Yorktown or White House in the first place, and thus have avoided all the tough work of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania, we think it is easy to discern a meaning which may not happen to be expressed in words. This refrain was first chaunted by the Richmond press in unison. It then went across the ocean and was echoed back by the rebel sympathizing journals of England and France, after which it was taken up by such organs as the Army and Navy Journal and the National Intelligencer. Let us see what it amounts to.

Certainly Gen. Grant could have landed his army on the peninsula. There he would have encountered the same enemy whom he met in the Wilderness, probably behind entrenchments more formidable than any which were found between the Rapidan and the Pamunkey. At any rate the same enemy would have been there, endowed with the same capabilities of resistance; and if it be conceded that the great object of aggressive war is to meet and overcome the enemy, the argument adopted by the Intelligencer, whether copied from its Richmond contemporaries or devised by its own wit, is either sheer childishness or downright impudence. "That bloody route," "those terrible passes," exclaims the Intelligencer. We know not why the same objurgations may not be applied to all the campaigns in history where there has been a disposition on both sides to fight. Indeed, there is one campaign, which we think will match it, where, on one side, the disposition to fight was not great. We refer to the campaign of 1863 on the Peninsula, conducted by Major General McClellan.

The Intelligencer makes Gen. Grant's losses up to (but not including) the last assault on Petersburg, 68,500. We have taken some pains to ascertain what were General McClellan's losses on the Peninsula. We find they were 70,835.

This information is derived by subtracting the number of men present for duty at Harrison's Bar, July 15, 1862, from the whole number of men sent to Gen. McClellan on the Peninsula. Mr. John Tucker, then Assistant Secretary of War, upon whom was devolved the duty of providing transportation for the Army of the Potomac, testifies (page 265, vol. 1, Report on the Conduct of the War) that the following troops were transported to Gen. McClellan:

Prior to 5th of April	121,500
Franklin's division	12,000
McDowell's division	10,000
From Baltimore and Fortress Monroe	11,000
Part of Shields' division	5,000
Total	159,500

On page 266 of the same volume, Gen. Meigs estimates the number of men thus transported at 160,000. That these figures are approximately correct is shown by the consolidated report of the strength of the Army of the Potomac on the 30th of April, 1862 (page 323), and the Adjutant General's statement of the reinforcements sent to Gen. McClellan prior to the 15th of June, 1862 (page 345), to wit:

Aggregate strength 30th of April	130,976
Reinforcements present for duty to 15th June, 20,300
Deduct Franklin's division, twice counted	12,700
	151,456
Add Shields' division, sent after 15th June	5,000
	156,456

We will now let Gen. McClellan tells us how many men he had fit for duty on the 15th of July, 1862, at Harrison's Bar. We quote from his dispatch of that date to the President:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, July 15th, 1862.
Present for duty	86,930
Sick	16,372
Absent	34,154
Aggregate	115,456

"I submit official reports that I have present for duty: officers, 3,615; enlisted men, 86,930; in all, 90,545. I cannot vouch for more."—Report on the Conduct of the War, page 343.

Hence the result:

Whole number of men sent to General McClellan	159,500
Number of men fit for duty at Harrison's Landing	86,665
Losses	70,835

The Intelligencer bewails loudly the casualties of the seven days' battles around Gen. Grant's camps, embracing the two battles in the Wilderness and the principal share of the fighting at Spottsylvania, which it estimates at 35,000. This is about the same number that Gen. McClellan lost by disease alone in the Warwick and Chickahominy marshes. On page 345 of the volume already quoted from, we find a statement from the Adjutant General of the Army, compiled from Gen. McClellan's official returns, of the comparative strength of the Army of the Potomac on the last day of April, and the 30th day of June, 1862, from which we learn that there were only 115,102 men present for duty on the day last mentioned. All of Gen. McClellan's reinforcements had reached him before the 20th of June except the 5,000 of Shields' division. In other words, he had received, first and last, 154,500 men prior to that date. His losses therefore had been 39,398. But, only three engagements had taken place up to this time, Williamsburg, Seven Pines and Fair Oaks—the losses at Williamsburg were about 2,200, and at Seven Pines and Fair Oaks less than 5,000 each. If we suppose they amounted to 9,000 in all, (and this is a liberal allowance, which will easily cover the skirmishes on the road,) we have losses to the number of 30,398 men not by battle. And we may add that no field of battle ever presented a more appalling spectacle than did the typhoid hospitals at Yorktown during the spring and early summer of 1862.

It is not our purpose to compare results. That would be impossible while the results of General Grant's campaign are still pending. We may say, however, that while General Grant has been inflicting heavy losses upon the enemy at every step, we never heard that the rebel army lost thirty-three thousand men by disease while General McClellan was dragging up from Fortress Monroe to the Chickahominy, or that they suffered more than usual from that cause. Nor should we, in any case, deem that a brilliant campaign in which the comparative advantages were measured by the ratio of twenty-five apparently correct is shown by the consolidated report of the strength of the Army of the Potomac on the 30th of April, 1862 (page 323), and the Adjutant General's statement of the reinforcements sent to Gen. McClellan prior to the 15th of June, 1862 (page 345), to wit:

The fourth resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That neither Congress nor a Territorial Legislature, whether by direct legislation or legislation of an indirect and unfriendly nature, possesses the power to annul or impair the constitutional right of any citizen or the United States to take his slave property into the common territories; but it is the duty of the Federal Government there to afford for that, as for other species of property, the needful protection; and if experience should at any time prove that the judiciary does not possess power to insure adequate protection, it will then become the duty of Congress to supply such deficiency.

As Gen. McClellan belonged to the Breckinridge party in 1860 it may be presumed that the dogma embodied in Davis' resolution is one of the "Constitutional rights" heretofore withheld from the South which he is anxious to secure to them. It is still further evident that he would now concede it to them because he says that the Union is the one condition of peace. Senator Douglas grappled the monstrous progeny of the Senate caucus as soon as it was brought forth, and he did not cease to combat it as long as he lived. It is a matter of the plainest history, so recent that nobody has forgotten it, that Davis & Co. rent the Democratic party asunder, for the declared reason that they could not get their "constitutional right" to carry slavery into the Territories, and have it protected there by the Federal Government. When Gen. McClellan urges us to give the South their constitutional rights in the future, we ask him if this is the right he refers to? Being the vital, and indeed the only point in controversy when secession began, we conclude that it is. Then we say that the loyal people are not ready to yield to that demand. We say that they are less ready to yield to it now than they were four years ago. We say further that the friends and followers of Stephen A Douglas are not prepared to kneel to his assassins and confess that they were right when they brought him to the block at Charleston.

No! This great controversy is not to be settled till it is settled right. The division has gone beyond the remedies of patch work. Our enemies know it full well, and hence their unvarying demand that we shall recognize secession as an accomplished fact before we talk of peace. Though we humble ourselves as low as the Chicago Convention, and the Chicago candidates would humble us—though we admit that we were wrong in 1860, when we refused to protect slavery in the territories, and hence that we had been murderers ever since—they will have no Union with us. The question is committed to the arbitrament of the sword, and by the decision both we and they must abide.

The Day-Star.

Maine cast a very full vote despite the absence of at least ten thousand of her voters in the Union armies. The Union party carries the State, of course, and by just about the majority of last year, re-electing Governor Cony by some 17,000 majority, and putting John Lynch (Union) in the place of Lorenzo D. M. Sweat (Democrat) in the next House of Representatives by about 1,000 majority. Several candidates elected in 1863 by 127 majority; but that was blunder not to be repeated.) The whole delegation to the next Congress will be Unionist, including a Senator in place of Wm. P. Fessenden. The Representatives will stand as follows:

District 1—John Lynch, of Portland.
2—Sidney Perham, of Paris.
3—Frederick A. Pike, of Augusta.
4—John H. Rice, of Foxcroft.
5—Frederick A. Pike, of Calais.

The Legislature is of course Unionist, "all hollow."

Maine has voted for Governor at the six last State elections as follows:

	Republican.		Democrat.	Maj.
1858	Morrill	57,221	Smith	45,807	12,914
1860	Washburne	69,464	Smart	51,373	18,091
1861	do	67,475	Smart	48,539	18,936
			War dem.	18,262
1862	do	62,534	Peace dem.	29,651	9,080
1863	Cony (Un.)	68,266	Bradbury	50,883	17,716

We estimate the vote of this year a little higher than that of last. The majority, so far as received, is slightly increased, but will not vary much from that of last year.

Vermont.

We have returns from 155 towns, comprising about three fourths of the popular vote The Union gain in these towns is 2,500. Democratic gain, 384; whole gain, 2,581. The Union gain on majority is 1,813. The 80 towns to come in will probably bring our majority up to a little over 20,000. Last year it was 17,651. We notice that the Democratic journals resort to the same trick as last year—making comparisons of the vote with 1862, when their party made no contest, polling only 3,811 votes in all the State; whereas, in 1856 they had 16,894, in 1860, 14,609, and in 1861 they had 13,000. Considering that Vermont soldiers do not vote, and that the perfect certainty of easy success makes our friends indifferent in the canvass, we have ample reason to be satisfied with the result in the Green Mountain State.

Two or Three Facts.

The Copperheads assert that Mr. Lincoln has needlessly prolonged the war; history will say that General McClellan has done more to prolong the war than any other man in the North.

The Copperheads complain that Mr. Lincoln has sanctioned arbitrary arrests; history will say that General McClellan was the first man in the North, or among the first, to authorize and direct such arrests.

The Copperheads charge it as one of Mr. Lincoln's chief crimes that he has favored an emancipation; history will show that foremost among the practical supporters of such a policy was General McClellan.

The Copperheads have abused Mr. Lincoln for resorting to a draft to fill up the Union ranks; history will say that the first man to advise a draft was General McClellan.

Copperhead Forgery.

The Copperhead managers are circulating a handbill of which the following is a copy:

VOTERS, READ THIS!

Extract from a Speech as quoted by the Hon. Daniel Webster, in the Senate of the United States, on the 7th of March, 1850.

"If the infernal Fanatics and Abolitionists ever get the power in their hands, they will override the Constitution, rot the Supreme Court at pleasure, change and make Laws to suit themselves. They will say nothing about you, who differ with them politically in opinion, or dare question their infallibility, but the country, and finally deluge it with blood."

Let no one be misled by the above. Daniel Webster's 7th of March speech is in print, and there is no such passage in it. It is a bold forgery.

Slaves Freed by the Rebellion.

[From the Boston Transcript.]

In commenting, in last evening's Transcript, on Jeff. Davis' statement to Mr. Gilmore, that "You (we) have already emancipated nearly two million of our slaves—and if you will take care of them, you may emancipate the rest," you express the fear that Davis overstated the number. If your glance at the following statistics from the last census, you will perceive that he was much nearer the truth than he usually is. In June, 1860, there were in

Kentucky, slaves	225,490
Maryland	87,189
Delaware	1,797
District Columbia	11,131
Tennessee	275,784
Virginia	490,887
All slaves (one half of them are freed, say	850,000
Add to this from North and South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, and Louisiana, at least 20,000 men, and 400,000 women and children, say	800,000
And we have a total of	1,650,278

All of these blacks are practically free, and the sum total will no doubt surprise your readers as much as it has me. One and a half millions of slaves made free, and yet the peace men say we have accomplished nothing by the war!" J. B. G.

Mr. Gilmore puts the figures too high. All the slaves of Kentucky are not free, nor the half of them. One third of the slaves of Tennessee are yet in servitude. The number freed in Virginia will not exceed 125,000, and the estimate for the other States is certainly 200,000 too high. We suppose that about one million of slaves have obtained their freedom since the war began. McClellan, in his letter of acceptance, proposes, if elected, to kidnap and return them all to bondage in order to propitiate the rebels.

We find the following paragraph in the Richmond Enquirer of the 8d inst.:

GEN. JOHN H. WINDER.—This officer, well known in this city, has been removed from command at the post of Andersonville, Georgia, we learn, for "incapacity and inhumanity to prisoners."

This paragraph amounts to a confession of the truth of all the charges which have been made in relation to the inhuman treatment of our prisoners at Andersonville. Possibly, now that Winder is removed, their confinement may be made more tolerable.

The first installment of the new Atlantic (submarine) cable arrived at New York on Saturday in the bark Maria, from London. It is between three and four hundred miles in length, and is consigned to Cyrus W. Field, Esq.

From Sherman's Army.

The Great Battle of Sept. 1.

[From Our Special Correspondent.]
IN THE FIELD, NEAR LOVEJOY'S, Ga., Sept. 3, 1864.

The fierce effort to break the front of the Army of the Tennessee and its bloody repulse by the 15th corps, with the movements and dispositions of the other corps which finished the day's work of the 31st, have been already narrated.

The day closed with the army disposed as follows: The extreme left, the 23d corps, lay along the railroad with the left of the corps two miles south of Rough and Ready Station; adjoining it on the right was the 4th corps. These corps fronted east. Between the right of the 4th corps and the left of the Army of the Tennessee was an interval of some six miles, which was covered by the 14th corps which lay west of Flint River, massed near Renfro's House, so as to cover the trains and act as a reserve in case of necessity. In front of the left and center were no works of any great importance. The Army of the Tennessee held the right, with the front of one corps, the 15th its left, supported by Bryant's brigade, of Woods' division of the 17th corps, and its left a refused line running back towards the river, held by a division of Ransom's 16th corps. The extreme left was covered by Garrard's cavalry, and the extreme right by that of Kilpatrick.

During the night Gen. Sherman's orders were issued for the battle of the succeeding day, the 1st.

The 17th corps was thrown across the river as a reserve to the Army of the Tennessee. The front of the Army of the Tennessee was close up to the rebel lines, which was heavily intrenched and fortified with parapets, abattis and palisades. If my explanation of the position has been understood, it will be seen that the rebels held a position, which at the close of the battle of the 31st, was occupied by the divisions of Hardee and Lee, was in a line in front of the railroad, and curving from a point near it north of Jonesboro' in a south westerly course towards Flint River, opposite to and covering that village. There was a line of rifle pits running back at right angles with the rebel right, and protecting their flank.

According to the plan of battle, as set forth in Gen. Sherman's orders, the 4th Corps was to move south along the railroad starting at daylight of the 1st, the 23d Corps following it closely—both corps to move in fighting trim, with no transportation except ambulances and ammunition trains. By the time that the head of the 4th Corps had reached an attacking position, the 15th Corps was to have crossed Flint River and moved into position on the right of the 4th Corps. The two corps, the 15th and 4th, were then to assault the enemy's position on the right flank. So much of the Army of the Tennessee as was in position was to make a demonstration at the same time for the purpose of detaining the rebels in their main line of works.

At an early hour in the morning of the 1st of September Gen. Sherman and Gen. Thomas moved down to the right near the Headquarters of Gen. Howard—near the field of the expected battle. All night and through the whole forenoon the rebels had been busy and kept up a wicked fire. To such demonstrations our troops replied. The lines were at short distance, and the men, engaged in exciting picket firing, resorted to all the ways of firing and flame of experienced skirmishers to save themselves and kill their adversaries. All silence, all the heavy fall of smoke and dust drifted leisurely away, and we saw our troops moving across the field again in the same splendid lines. Simultaneously with their splendid line, began the fire on his whole front. The struggle of the 14th corps was to be renewed, and it was of the first importance that all the force that was done in making it should be put forward. Then, and then only, Davis's troops drove the enemy thrice into and out of their works, and captured Gen. Garvin, a great part of his brigade, and the two guns. Simultaneously with the attempted to retake the batteries, and were assisted by Gist's brigade of Walker's division, from the extreme left. For an hour the issue was fierce. In the left hand fell its captures and its position. Gen. Gist—was severely wounded.

If at that time the 4th corps had been in the position assigned to Gen Stanley, and had moved promptly on the left of Davis the greater portion of Hardee's command must have been captured. There never was a better opportunity for the annihilation of a command than the field that Johnston presented at 4 o'clock that afternoon. When left in the field to be not any more here, and in a new letter to discuss, I simply give your readers the facts. If there was fault, either of head or heart, there are proper authorities to ascertain the fact, and provide against the recurrence of such failure in the future.

The day was too far advanced when Kimball's brigade of Newtonson's division of the 4th corps came up to attempt any new movements or renew the attack, and the day closed with a tremendous shelling of the rebel positions by Logan's and Blair's corps. The results of this day's work, although every one could see and believe that they might have been more decisive, were very satisfactory. Our troops had driven the rebels, captured the enemy's position, captured Brig. Gen. James Garvin, 800 men, and ten guns—four of the Loomis battery which Rosecrans lost at Chickamauga.

Of their loss in killed and wounded I have no reliable data. It must have been severe, but was probably less than the day before, for the reason that the line of fire was shorter by at least two divisions. Beside we were the assaulting party, which usually suffers most heavily. A rebel surgeon, left with a few of their wounded, estimated their loss in the two days was about five thousand.

During the night the whole of the camp was awakened by the sound of a tremendous cannonade. The sounds came from the direction of Atlanta, in which direction we could see the light of a conflagration. We learned in the morning that the rebels were engaged in destroying their ammunition and hastily evacuating their Gate City. Strange as it may seem to your readers, when the announcement was made of the evacuation of Atlanta, it produced no great excitement among the officers and men, who labored so long and severely for its possession.

At about half-past three in the morning it was discovered that the rebels were leaving their works in front of the 15th and 16th corps. So soon as the skirmishers could see, they were advanced, the skirmishers of the rebel rear guard were found in the village, and driven through it. A train loaded with two thousand rebel wounded, and drawn by two locomotives was just leaving, or rather it left hastily without removing all of the wounded from the hospitals. So soon as the skirmishers could see, they were advanced, received their orders from Gen. Sherman, whose headquarters for the time was at the house of an old secession, who had a contract for subsisting Federal prisoners. It was ascertained that Lee's corps moved out on the first by the McDonough road, and that Hardee moved along the railroad southward. The 23d corps moved out on the the McDonough road, the 4th corps along the railroad, the 15th on the country road west of the railroad, and the 17th on the extreme right, the 16th in reserve to the Army of the Cumberland. The 16th subsequently became the reserve to the Army of the Tennessee.

The 4th division of the 15th corps, Wood's division of the 17th, and Col. Hotchkiss of the 2d division of the 4th being in advance.

Three-fourths of a mile from the old works Walcott's brigade of the 15th corps struck the rebel rear guard and drove it without a halt into a bottom near Cedar Bluffs. From the crest of the hill opposite the rebel position it was an open field across the bottom lands and up the hill to the rebel works. The rebels had a strong skirmish line along the morass and extending over the high ground in Wood's front, and had already opened a few batteries. Gen. Sherman came on the ground while the dispositions were being made in the rear of Walcott's brigade of Gen. Logan formed Oliver's brigade in line of battle, forming the remainder of his division in column of regiments. The rebel works were

THE NEWS.

It seems to us it is quite time Grandpapa Wickliffe called together his Peace Sneak convention, for here in the Shenandoah valley, under the lead of a wild Irishman, named Sheridan, there has been a flagrant violation of the principles of the Constitution. Mayor Charles, and Comptroller Lee, Fall River, SHOEMAKER of our Southern brethren have been arbitrarily arrested, and the rights of property have been invaded in an unconstitutional manner to the extent of the seizure of FIFTEEN rebel flags and numerous cannon. The Peace Sneaks have a right to complain. It is, no doubt, perfectly natural they should do so. Briefly told, and in the straightforward language of the dispatches, on Monday, the 19th, Maj. Gen. Sheridan attacked the rebel forces under Generals Breckinridge and Early, near Bunker Hill, in the Shenandoah Valley, fought a hard battle all day, and a brilliant victory was won by our forces. The enemy was driven over twelve miles. Three thousand prisoners were captured. Fifteen stand of colors and five pieces of artillery were taken, and the rebel killed and wounded left in our hands. The rebel Generals Rhodes and Gordon were killed. Four other rebel Generals were wounded.

All this was not without loss to ourselves, but while we mourn our fallen heroes loyal cannon will join the jubilant clangor of the bells in the paans of victory, than which the war has given scarcely none more signal.

It is a complete rout," says the latest dispatch, and what loyal man cannot see join in the chorus and panic of that sort the pertinens of the Grave-Digger of the Chickahominy, whose cause wanes precisely as the rebel standard lowers. Our boys in blue are impatient to finish the work, and they have already made long strides towards it in the capture of Atlanta and this victory at Bunker Hill. Let loyal men sustain the army, and the end is near.

Our Washington advices give us advices from Grant, and through rebel channels of the situation at Atlanta. No change is reported since our last issue.

Gen. Grant has returned to the Army of the Potomac. He never goes away but for an object, and he means business always. Presently the echo from the Shenandoah will be heard from below Petersburg.

Many loyal men will be startled at an act of rebel piracy on Lake Erie, which has resulted in the loss of two small steamboats, a fortunate escape from far greater perils to the Union cause. Those of our Northern readers most likely to be befuddled, will be the good easy souls who have regarded all newspaper stories as purely sensational that pointed to the existence of a hostile element lurking in Canada and ready to visit mischief on our lake commerce and cities. No one will deny it now, in the face of these facts, and one is lost in wonder at the blundering stupidity of these fresh water pirates, who having arrived at the dangerous advantage of two steamers in their full control, could only manage to destroy these, when the lake about them was white with the sails of our commerce. The whole affair, as far as the rebels were concerned, was a bungle, of which of course we do not complain, but chronicle the fact as being so. Next time it may be otherwise, and the blindest should be fully warned.

Gold was weaker yesterday, owing to Phil. Sheridan's brilliant affair in the Shenandoah. The reasons are given in our New York dispatch why the full effect of the war news on the gold market was not realized. No such interposition, however, saved the Peace Sneak cause from the full effect of the dissolver to their friends, the rebels.

Hon. Carl Schurz made a rousing Lincoln and Johnson speech in Philadelphia on Friday night of last week.

It will give great satisfaction to friends of our wounded and sick soldiers, prisoners in rebel hands, to know that they are to be speedily exchanged in accordance with arrangements perfected by General Butler. It is not the fault of the rebels that all our brave boys in their hands are not on the sick list.

Milwaukee Union men were preparing yesterday to welcome home with distinguished honors their brave and noble officer, General E. A. Paine, who has just resigned his commission to accept the candidacy for Congress in that District, against one of the meanest of Wisconsin Copperheads, and when that kind of meanness gets condemned into very few men, as in Wisconsin, a thoroughly mean man is the result. General Paine will make a brilliant run, will be elected, and will do Wisconsin and the Northwest great honor.

One return has come in from the Presidential election. The votes of 1,500 soldiers at Fort Snelling, Minnesota, have been taken and forwarded in sealed envelopes to the proper parties at St. Paul. The vote is supposed to stand: For Lincoln, 1,300; McClellan, 200. The soldiers were composed of new recruits and conscripts. Walt until we hear from the veterans. An un...cists Copperhead editor who went up to Gettysburg was escorted out of the fort by such persons, who as the soldiers could bring to bear in the shape of the bayonet in close proximity to his treasonable rear.

The draft took place yesterday in Davenport, St. Louis, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and other localities throughout the West. It passed off very quietly and without any disturbance.

A large force of 30,000 men is said to have recently concentrated at Morganzia, La.; composed in part or Gen. Granger's troops, lately setting against Mobile. A later dispatch announces that the main body has already left, destination unknown; perhaps to reinforce Sherman, perhaps to operate against the expedition fitting out at Jackson under Forrest & Co.

The individual arrested at Indianapolis and supposed to be the butcher Quantrell, turns out to be another person. The latter has been cheated out of a deserving victim.

We have later news from Europe by the arrival of two steamers. Money matters in England are disturbed, and there are signs of a panic. American securities continue in demand in Germany at a still further advance. The Bank of England has advanced its rates of discount to nine per cent.

Iris is rumored to be on the point of recognising the Kingdom of Italy. The health of the Emperor of France is reported unsatisfactory.

PENDLETON.

We present a few extracts elsewhere from the Congressional speeches of Geo. H. Pendleton, the Democratic nominee for Vice President of the United States. Mr. Pendleton has the merit of being one of the most straightforward speakers in the United States. Believing that the war ought never to have been begun, he says so frankly before the first shot was fired, and adhering to the same opinions, he has reiterated them boldly and unequivocally ever since. He thinks that immediate peace and separation is the cure-all for our national difficulties, and he says so without circumlocution. No disciple of John C. Calhoun was ever more thoroughly wedded to the doctrine of "State Rights," as it is understood in South Carolina, than Mr. Pendleton, and no one has avowed it more broadly. If Mr. Pendleton were a candidate for the Presidency of the Southern Confederacy, he would get more votes than Stephens, Toombs, Cobb, or Wigfall and if Jeff. Davis should die he could fill his chair, so far as political qualifications go, without a dissenting voice in all rebeldom. We commend Mr. Pendleton for his frankness, and we commend those who nominated him for theirs.

There is one feature of Mr. Pendleton's record that will perhaps astonish his best friends outside of Dixie. He holds that the people of the United States cannot amend their Constitution so as to abolish slavery. He says that it is not in the power of all the States save one to abolish slavery in that one State against its will. In other words, he holds that it is unconstitutional to amend the Constitution in the way prescribed by the Constitution. Patrick Henry thought differently, and he urged Virginia not to ratify the Constitution, for the very reason that three-fourths of the States might, at some future time, abolish slavery in Virginia against her will; and Virginia ratified the Constitution with the distinct understanding that it contained the power to abolish slavery whenever a constitutional majority should deem it proper to do so.

It is needless to follow Mr. Pendleton's record further. Either a man says that he was in favor of peace, even with Disunion, before the war began, that he is in favor of the same now, that he belongs to the Calhoun school of politicians, and that the people of the United States cannot amend their own Constitution so as to interfere with slavery—he has said enough to show all intelligent voters which side he stands on.

HEAD, HEAD, HEAD!

Washington Hunt's RESOLUTION as PRESENTED TO THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION:

Resolved, That in the future, as in the past, we will adhere with unswerving fidelity to the Union under the CONSTITUTION AS IT IS, and will resist with all our HEAD, HEART AND HAND, by all constitutional means, every attempt to change our present form of government by revolution, by violence, or by any other unauthorized means.

WASHINGTON HUNT'S RESOLUTION AS ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION:

Resolved, That in the future, as in the past, we will adhere with unswerving fidelity to the Union under the Constitution, as [illegible] the only solid foundation for our present greatness, and happiness as a people, and as a framework of government equally conducive to the welfare and prosperity of all the States, both Northern and Southern.

WHY THE PEOPLE WANT MR. LINCOLN.

Abraham Lincoln should be elected President of the United States for the following, among a host of other reasons:

1. He is emphatically a man of the people, the most DEMOCRATIC President we have ever had. Born to toil, he sympathizes with the toiling millions. Inured to labor, he could not if he would, and would not if he could, be an aristocrat. So long as he is in the White House the poor as well as the rich can visit the President and be heard. He represents the dignity and intelligence of free Northern labor, as against the present ideas and impositions of aristocracy in whatever form, and is dominated its every thought and impulse.

2. He is an honest man. His enemies bring no charge against his political or personal integrity. Yet, while honest he is not fanatical, but makes the largest allowance for all who differ from him, and makes even his own convictions yield to what manifests itself as the convictions of the majority of the people. Thus his honesty is saved from bigotry, and he stands peculiarly as the servant of the whole people.

3. He is an able man. Through all his plain and homely simplicity he appears a sagacity that grapples on equal terms with the mightiest intellects, and moves on undismayed to the consummation of the most momentous events of any age. Leather needs a polish. Bubbles require a setting. But the true diamond needs none. If Mr. Lincoln were polished we might doubt whether his polish had not imposed him upon us for more than he is really worth. But every aristocratic we might inquire whether we had not mistaken his assumption for ability. But being honest, plain Abraham Lincoln "we know in whom we have believed."

4. He has administered the Government more satisfactorily to the people during the past four years than any of his predecessors since Washington has done so. This is proven by the unprecedented unanimity with which the Union delegates from all parts of the country renominated him by acclamation, and by the great approach to unanimity with which the loyal press support him. No rival candidate was even proposed in the convention which nominated him. Every delegate had come either personally by his own convictions or pledged by his constituents, to nominate Mr. Lincoln. To charge that corruption could produce such an unanimity, is to suppose that the whole loyal portion of the American people can be bribed; for the primary conventions at which the delegates were appointed who nominated him, were open to all who were true to the Union, without other distinction of party. The fact that Mr. Lincoln had no rival in a convention so chosen, is the highest proof that his administration was satisfactory. In the main, to all who love the Union.

5. He has been true to his oath to maintain the Union, endeavoring at first, by his friendly inaugural and other peaceful declarations of the most kind and forbearing nature, to win back the rebels to their allegiance by peaceful means if possible, and failing in those he has invoked the military strength of the nation to suppress the rebellion, as by the Constitution he of right was bound to do.

6. He has, under the providence of God, been reasonably, honorably, and even gloriously successful in the aggregate of his efforts to maintain the Union, having, with a celerity unprecedented in history, compressed, within four years, an extent and magnitude of military achievements never before performed within twenty years, having reduced a rebellion of unprecedented magnitude to one of dimensions no greater than that of many rebellions which have been triumphantly suppressed, and diminished its area three-fourths, and its armies from a million of fighting men to little over a hundred thousand. The problem is, what can a President who has whipped three-fourths of a rebellion in two years do in four.

7. In his military appointments he has been so liberal that not the shadow of a charge of political favoritism has ever been rested against him. Of the first two hundred and thirty generals appointed, two hundred were Democrats, and the armies and navies have very largely been commanded by Democratic officers. No officer of the government has ever been removed for Democracy merely however outspoken or positive. Hunter, Phelps and Fremont were, however, removed for too anti-slavery measures.

These are the means and by the general wisdom of his administration the latter has at all times received the support of all who were prepared to support the Government. It would had proven him a traitor had he received the support of any others.

8. He has committed no infraction of the constitution. The right to suspension of the habeas corpus during rebellion is as much a safeguard of the constitution as the habeas corpus itself. Those who oppose or fear its exercise are enemies of the constitution. His mitigation of Vallandigham's sentence passed by a legal military tribunal was an act of excessive forbearance and clemency, not of despotic rigor. The requirement that rebels in the semi-rebellious States shall take the oath of allegiance is constitutional and liberal to them, instead of being oppressive. His efforts to aid the people of the reconquered States, where a majority are still disloyal, to establish the nucleus of a State Government, has been dictated by the purest and most judicious motives. The slander that he desires such embryo States to vote for him until Congress has recognized them as States, is disproved by his own proclamation. He only desires that they shall be the means of mitigating the rigors of military law, which must otherwise control the reconquered States until a majority of their people shall have returned to their loyalty.

HOW TO PAY OUR DEBT.

The Richmond Examiner states that if the Confederate debt should each two thousand millions of dollars, it could easily be paid by an export duty of five cents a pound on cotton, which would fall upon the consumers of cotton abroad and not upon the producers at home.

By "the consumers of cotton abroad" are meant England, France, and (on the hypothesis of rebel independence) the Northern States. As the latter would consume about a third of the cotton produced at the South this clever little proposition is nothing less than a plan to make the Northern States pay one-third the interest on the rebel debt to all time. This is, no doubt all very pleasant, and may be very satisfactory to Horatio Seymour, Vallandigham, and the peace sneaks generally. But as our debt is no larger than that of the rebels it strikes us as quite as feasible, after suppressing the rebellion, to make the rebels pay the whole of our debt by this cotton tax, as to make us pay one-third or half of theirs. An amendment of the Constitution would be necessary before duty could be laid on export, but this could easily be effected. The amount of our exports of cotton were, in 1860, 1,767,686,338 pounds, which, under an export duty of five cents a pound, would amount to $88,384,817; an export duty of ten cents per pound, which might be added to the former price of cotton without bringing it up to the present price, and which, therefore, would be easily bear, would produce a revenue of $176,768,633, which would pay the annual interest on our entire debt of two thousand millions and leave a surplus of twenty millions per annum as a sinking and to pay off the principal. The essential question is, therefore, shall we dissolve the Union, and pay a third of the rebel debt besides, compromise, and pay the whole of it in addition to our own, or carry on the war, suppress the rebellion, and pay no part of the rebel debt, but, on the contrary, apply the rebel proposition of an export duty on cotton to the payment of our own debt, principal and interest? Will some of the peace sneaks, who are groaning about the necessity of repudiation, tell us frankly which is the most economical?

GEN. SHERMAN'S ORDER.

It is astonishing how quick and sensitive the malignants are to anything that is likely to hurt the rebels, and to cause them to feel the pinch of the war. A dog with a sore ear is not more disturbed with the buzzing of flies, than the Chicago Times with any order of a General which puts the cup its friends in Dixie have filled, to their own lips. It is now greatly distressed by Sherman's order which vacates Atlanta of its inhabitants; and talks about "20,000 people being driven from the city, etc."

In the first place, the 20,000 people of the Times are about 1,500—the rest of its former, 20,000 inhabitants being in the rebel army, or having already fled, before its occupation by us. And then suppose there were 40,000; who is to feed them? Gen. Sherman very well knows by experience, that that task would fall upon him. He knows too that he has but a single line of railroad to do it—a line liable to interruptions by guerillas—and which is but sufficient to supply his own army with food, forage, and ammunition; and especially, with a hostile army in his front, and in a country hostile to him. Were he able to collect his supplies from the region about him, the case would be different. But no large army can do that in the face of an enemy, in a hostile region, though supplies may be ever so plenty.

But if Sherman is to carry his campaign into Georgia he must sustain his own army, no matter what becomes of his enemy, and though some "women and children" may suffer. But in truth his order is one of mercy to the poor people of Atlanta. He cannot undertake to feed them—they must of necessity go elsewhere. And now is the time, while the weather is warm and food is attainable, for them to be removed, without waiting till winter and starvation drives them out.

Nor is this order the first of the kind. Grant devastated the country about Vicksburg for thirty miles distance, when he laid siege to the place, for the protection of his rear. And the Times does not recognize the authority of that example, Johnston ordered off the whole population of Northwestern Georgia, as far south as the Coosa River, before the opening of this very campaign. In this order he probably displaced more people from their homes than Sherman's order will drive from Atlanta. Did the Times forget to wail over that order? The truth is, that war has hardships for a good many people—and for some who have no other connection with it than to live where it rages.

McCORMICK.

The Chicago Times is fearful that people will lose sight of the enormous debt which the Northwest owes to C. H. McCormick, and thereby fail to elect him to Congress on account of the patriotic reaper, is small enough, and has been paid ten times over in cash. We will not go into the early history of the rest of the Virginia reaper, or inquire whether it be the person who has received all the pay for it really invented it or not. The traditions of Rockbridge county are very conflicting on this point. Probably as many people can be found there to swear that he invented nothing at all, as that he invented the reaper which is associated with his name. But we let that pass, and turn to facts which are matters of record within a stone's throw of us.

Mr. C. H. McCormick, in his efforts to make a reaping machine, pirated the invention of a poor New York mechanic named Obed Hussey. This invention was by far the most ingenious and valuable portion of "McCormick's Reaper," viz: the cutter. Mr. Hussey invented that remarkable arrangement of the zigzag sickle, running within iron fingers, which annually mows down the grain and hay crops of a large portion of the world. Mr. Hussey was poor, and perhaps imperfectly acquainted with his own rights in the premises. So Mr. McCormick stole it from him and called it his own. With it he built up an immense fortune, and made himself famous through all Christendom, while Mr. Hussey yet remained poor. By and by, Mr. Hussey became rich enough to assert his rights. He appealed to the laws of his country, and in a suit of almost unexampled length and magnitude, in which Mr. McCormick employed a dozen of the ablest lawyers of the United States, Obed Hussey established his claim before the world. He proved Mr. McCormick to be an impostor, and a pirate upon other men's toil and brains. He obtained a decree of the United States Circuit Court, Judge McLean presiding, in this city, assessing heavy damages upon McCormick for the use of the cutter, and a per centage upon all future machines which he should make with Mr. Hussey's invention.

If McCormick invented anything, he invented the real which lends the grain over against the cutter. For this he was long ago paid in full, and a balance of some millions has been carried to the credit of the people on account of it. Hussey's cutter is a great and valuable invention without McCormick's reel. McCormick's reel is worthless without Hussey's cutter. Obed Hussey did not live long enough to enjoy the full reward of his great and beneficent invention. He left a name unstained by one dishonorable act, and if the people are to be called on now to elect anybody to Congress as a reward for the reaping machine, let them find one of the heirs of the New York mechanic, who enriched the whole country, but enriched no one so much as the man whom we are now asked to vote for to show our gratitude for the patent reaper.

State Agricultural Fairs.

IOWA.

The Annual Fair of the Iowa State Agricultural Society will be held at Burlington this year, commencing on Tuesday, September 27, and closing on Saturday. This effort of the Society have been using unusual efforts during the season to make this Fairs success beyond precedent, and we trust their efforts will be rewarded by a prompt and generous response by the farmers, artisans and merchants of the State. The premium list is very large, and embraces almost every article of farm and household economy. The hotels at Burlington, unlike others we could name nearer home, have fixed their charges at moderate rates, the highest charge being but $2 per day.

Contracts in writing have been perfected with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, the Burlington and Missouri river, and the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota railroad companies, to transport visitors over their lines to and from the Fair at half fare.

The Mississippi and Missouri River Railroad Company will also extend the same facilities to persons visiting the Fair, as other railroads in the State.

All stock, implements and articles intended for exhibition will be carried free to and from the Fair, provided the same has been exhibited and has not been sold. Exhibitors can procure the necessary certificates on application to the Secretary.

We shall give full reports of these Fairs.

☞ The McClellanites are working desperately, but the tide is against them. They make much noise, especially with their powder, but they make no headway. There are more men willing to vote their ticket the day after it was nominated, than there are now; and more now than there will be on the day of election. Their equivocation respecting their platform hurts them badly. The people demand of their party that it shall at least have faith in their own principles, and not be ashamed to own them. When the Convention puts forth one creed, its candidate another, plainly irreconcilable with the former, and not even an effort is made to efface or explain their discrepancy, be sure the fates are against them. Discussion must render their position more and more awkward, less and less tenable. The motley party cannot abide the rough handling of an earnest, stirring, vigorous campaign.

☞ In the death of Brig. Gen. D. A. Russell, the army has lost one of its noblest ornaments and the country one of its most courageous defenders. It was he who led a division of the Army of the Potomac over the rebel fortifications at Rocky Run last fall, capturing 600 prisoners and Hooker's and Reyrebel brigades. A more brilliant or desperate assault than that has not been made during the war, and we presume that was in the same similar feat of daring, during the battle of Monday, that he lost his life. General Russell was a native of New York, a graduate of West Point, and Major of the 8th regular infantry.

☞ The Detroit Advertiser relates the following: "We were amused the other night at the attempts of one of the unwashed, whose tongue had become a little thick from the effects of his favorite beverage, to pronounce the names of the Democratic candidates. 'Hurra for McClel'n and Pen'lon! No, that ain't it! Hurra, I say, for McKennel and Pel'ton!' The poor fellow got further from the mark at every attempt, until he finally gave it up in despair, exclaiming, 'Oh! d—n such a mixed up mess! Hurrah for Jeff. Davis!'"

☞ "Well," said a Republican orator, at a meeting in Meriden, "I, too, am a peace man but when peace comes, I pray God she may come in the shape of a white winged angel, and not in the form of a white faced slave, clothed under the bloody feet of an aristocratic rebellion."

☞ "Spades not trumps this time," muttered a soldier in the army of the Potomac, after reading the McClellan Platform. There was will as well as politics in the veteran's allusion to the affective genius of McClellan for intrenching without marching.

THE DRAFT.

Quotas of Illinois.

Important Report of Adjutant General Fuller.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS, STATE OF ILLINOIS, ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE, SPRINGFIELD, Sept. 1st, 1864.

His Excellency GOVERNOR YATES:

On the first day of February last I had the honor to submit my report showing, among other things, that the total quotas of three years recruits assigned to this State prior to and including the call for 300,000, Oct. 18th, 1863, was 140,109; that the State had been credited for volunteers furnished prior to Oct. 1, 1863, with 126,369 IN OUR OWN REGIMENTS, and a balance of 4,376 on settlement with the State of Missouri, making 140,041, and leaving a balance against the State of 4,459; that the State had also claimed to have furnished prior to that date 144,086, leaving only a balance of 1,014, and that the difference in accounts between the Federal and State Governments would probably soon be placed to the credit of the State.

As a part of said report I submit a tabular statement, compiled from descriptive roll books on file in this department, showing the credits to which each county would then be entitled, providing the basis of our accounts should be allowed by the War Department, and that besides specific credits there stated, there was 8,106 to be apportioned to the different counties in the State on account of volunteers from other States in our regiments, and volunteers from our own State whose county residences were unknown.

These quotas, under the calls of 1863 and 1864, were assigned by the War Department according to three distinct principles, as ascertained by the census of 1860, in the calls of February and March, 1864, were assigned according to the enrollment of 1863, as corrected to that date, and the quotas under the call of July 18, 1864, were assigned according to the enrollments as corrected to July 1, 1864. Such being the rule under which quotas have been assigned to States, the same rule has been adopted in assigning the quotas to districts and sub-districts within this State.

The total deficiency against the State on the 1st of July last, was 10,182 The total deficiency by counties on the 1st of July, was 27,094. FROM KNOX COUNTY.

The Great Union Rally at Galesburg—The Resolutions—Speeches of General Oglesby, Prentiss and Others.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

GALESBURG, KNOX CO., Tuesday, September 20.

The Union demonstration here to-day was an immense outpouring of the loyal people of Knox and adjoining counties. They came up from every hamlet and village in all this section, and the result was an assembly variously estimated at from ten to twenty thousand. The actual number is doubtless between the two. I have attended a the political meetings of note in the State during the present canvass, and I am able to say that I expect to see no enthusiasm and numbers this exceeds them all. The demonstration at Prospect perhaps may be excepted.

The procession of this path string was the announcement that General Oglesby, the Union candidate for Governor of the State, was coming. Then there was a little after daylight this morning, the grand carriers of this immense multitude marched this city in a lumber wagon from each township, each wagon bearing the Union flag and a banner upon which was inscribed the name of the township it came from. Then the bands and fusiliers came in wagons and on horseback, with flags and patriotic emblems.

Some of the inscriptions were eminently suggestive of the temper of the people towards treason. One, a beautiful piece of love and devotion to the country, and a determination to transmit this glorious Union, cemented by the blood of our brave fathers, and to preserve and save sons, unimpaired to our posterity.

The speaking of the occasion was the immense procession with which the day opened. There were probably two miles of wagons, horseback and on foot. Those upon which were placed the great and beautiful devices and motto. There were over one hundred of these, and each one of the most extraordinary character, and to be peculiar in Chicago on the day of the nomination of Abraham Lincoln for President and a Mayor who had not sold himself to disloyal men.

Some idea of its extent may be gained from the fact that it was over an hour in passing one point. There were men and women in carriages, in lumber wagons, on horseback and on foot. Those from the National flags great and small, and beautiful devices and motto. There were over one hundred of these, and each one of the most extraordinary character, and to be peculiar in Chicago on the day of the nomination of Abraham Lincoln for President and a Mayor who had not sold himself to disloyal men.

Gen. Chapman, reported wounded, came out as Colonel of the 3d Indiana cavalry.

The War Department ordered that commanders of Departments forward to the Commissary General of Prisoners full rolls of all Federal prisoners of war received from either on parol or by exchange; and, also, of all rebel prisoners held by them, and of temporary deposits, or who have been exchanged by them; and also, whenever it is practicable, rolls of Federal troops captured and still remaining in their hands, regiment, company, and time and place of capture.

Washington special says: Secretary Fessenden has gone to Maine, and although a strict construction of the law may authorize a draft to be made in each sub-district to fill its deficit without reference to the fact that other districts have an excess, yet it is now proposed to make a draft of a State which, for the past two years has furnished an average surplus of from 25,000 to 40,000 men, and which has sent to the field 182,000, and had on the first of July 36,875 of THREE YEARS' MEN TO CREDIT AGAINST its quota of 56,007 ONE YEAR MEN, will feel some pride of State and doubt the justice of being required to furnish 28,000 by sub-districts, when there are only 13,440 against them as a State. I therefore submit that though the law may require each sub district to stand on its own account, each sub-district in the Federal Government can well afford to suspend the execution of such a power and give the State a reasonable time to fill the balance of its quota by volunteering. Under all these circumstances I cannot but believe your reconsideration on this subject, heretofore made, will meet the approval of the War Department.

I have the honor to remain,
Very respectfully, your obed't serv't,
ALLEN C. FULLER, Adj't Gen.

STATE AGRICULTURAL FAIR.

A General Survey—The Last Day.

[FROM OUR OWN Correspondent.]

DECATUR, Sept. 17, 1864.

I have given you a pretty full synopsis of the daily transactions at this Fair by telegraph during the week. I now propose to elaborate upon certain features of the exhibition which seem worthy of that consideration, and I may say, to start with, the Fair as a whole has probably been the most successful of the series since their inauguration, I think in 1853. Taxing into consideration the fact of the great scarcity of help, and the necessity of constant attendance and labor at home by farmers, this success is highly complimentary to the officers for the energy and good judgment with which the exhibition has been carried through by them to such triumphant success. If the new Board of officers, which was elected on Wednesday night, do but fulfill their trust as well, they will deserve the same measure of gratitude and praise, which is cordially awarded to the retiring Board. I speak of this Fair as a success. Financially it is so beyond precedent. In the articles of horses, cattle, sheep and farm implements, there has been no superior exhibition, if an equal. And the show of fine horses, which has been a leading feature of the Fair, is the largest and finest ever seen in the State. Many of the horses are from Kentucky, and came in charge of their owners, who have also brought with them their families, and are encamped on the ground. Their presence has added much to the gayety and animation of the scene. The display of cattle, sheep and farm implements, is also very large and fine. Many of the implements are from Chicago, and are of the most improved kinds. The display of fruit is also very large and fine, and the show of vegetables is unusually large and fine. The show of poultry is also very large and fine. The show of horses, cattle, sheep and farm implements, is also very large and fine. The show of fruit is also very large and fine. FROM GRANT'S ARM

The Rebel Raid—A Part of the Rebel Army Recaptured.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—The Herald's Army of the Potomac correspondent, of the 17th inst., says: Yesterday, at Berryville, Va., a detachment of Sheridan's rear position of our lines, picked up at Shepherdstown of Columbia cavalry, their regular field in which there were about 2,000 men. They were engaged in throwing scouts through the county to ascertain, if possible, daylight yesterday morning the approaching close in front of the last line of battle. The regular regiments of the division first comprising the troops of Wm. H. Lee, the second being the Hampton Legion—the third Rosser's brigade. The rebels were quickly breaking in front of our pickets, and were turned by right and left, moved around the rear of the rebel column, and captured horses belonging to our men. All this was done so quickly it was impossible to get any report from the rebels. The captures consisted of the Norfolk Railroad, but their success rested upon who arrives at Alexandria. At about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon an attack was made on our rear. Two consecutive movements were made against the lines in front of Crawford's and Getty's divisions, but were repulsed with heavy loss to the rebels on both occasions. This fact leads to the belief that the massing of troops at this point was with the intention of attacking our lines, and securing the drove of cattle.

In the pursuit, we find cause upon the part of the rebels to abandon their wounded. At the town of Martinsburgh, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, where we found them stowed away in the hospitals, and left to the care of the citizens. This fact leads to the belief that the massing of troops at this point was with the intention of attacking our lines, and securing the drove of cattle.

The driver moves the shovels from right to left, and releases them out of the ground with his foot, thus leaving his hands entirely free to guide his horses. I regard it as one of the best on the ground.

There are also Cultivators here from the manufactories of Darling & Prosser, Chicago; Dorsey, Decatur; A. J. Sparks, Wyanet; A. Hinkle, Mt. Pulaski; John Deere, Moline; Furst & Bradley, Chicago, which took the first premium; John Dodd, Kelthsburg; Kinyon, Amboy; Deston, Pekin, Meckers, Atlanta; Hall, Bloomington, Centralia; Thomas Mast, Springfield; and many others. They all seasing more or less points of superiority, but your room will not permit elaboration. There so many articles deserve passing notice.

CORN PLANTERS AND SEED SOWERS.

And here will be observed the same marked progress which characterizes the articles I have already mentioned. First, I will speak of

C. W. Brown's Corn Planter.—This machine deserves special mention, because it is one of the oldest in the West. Mr. Brown commenced their manufacture more than ten years ago, and during that period he has sold over 15,000 of them, with the privilege to each purchaser to return his machine and take his money if it did not prove all that was promised. Not a single machine has been returned. The Planter can be used for corn, broom corn, sorghum, dropping 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 kernels, as the operator wishes. It can be easily adjusted from 2 1-2 to 3 feet. It is hardly a farmer in the West, who does not understand and appreciate Mr. Brown's planter. It is not, I have stated, one of the cheapest planters in the West, and I do not hesitate to say one of the very best. Mr. Brown's office in Bloomington, Illinois, is conveniently doubled to the sanitary fair, and they were immediately disposed of, to the tune of $100 each. The sale price of these is $80.

Hutchison, of Litchfield, has a very good seeder; J. D. Smith, Peoria, planter; Selby, Elder & Co., planter; Bergen & Sisson, Galesburg, planter; Ferguson, Springfield, planter; and a score of others. What I have said of the other farm machinery, will apply to the planters. They show real progress in articles most interesting to farmers.

MOWERS.

Properly, I should have called attention to Mowers under the head of Reapers and Mowers, but will occupy a brief space here, to speak of Wood's prize mower. This mower took the first premium at the great Dixon trial. That year called it very generally regarded as one of the best, if not the best before the public. Wood's self-raker, mower and raker combined, and self-raking reaper, were also on exhibition, and attracted much attention. Charles F. Wolt-man, 206 Lake street, Chicago, is the General Western Agent.

CIDER MILLS.

In large numbers, were on the grounds, all of them busy in making cider, which was readily disposed of at five cents the glass, to the thirsty thousands in attendance. The owners of the mills found the business profitable, and would doubtless been glad to have had Fair-week last a whole year on the same terms. The silver medal for the best cider mill was awarded F. C. Winslow, of Freeport.

HORSE HAY FORKS AND PITCHING MACHINES.

These new articles of farm economy had five or six representatives here, and they kept the timothy and clover flying to the delight of the crowd. For such a silver medal was awarded to T. G. & M. Palmer, Chicago.

OTHER ARTICLES OF MACHINERY.

The crowded columns of the TRIBUNE will hardly afford room for more than simple enumeration of the large number of other articles intended for farm use, which were on exhibition here, all of which were examined by the farmers and outsiders with more or less interest. There were revolving horse rakes, threshing machines, corn shellers, Pickerell, Mechanicsburg, feather fly brush; Miss Mattie L. Wells, Decatur, leather work; Miss Mary L. Smith, Decatur, wax fruit; Nancy Warren, Decatur, bead collars and jobs; Miss C. C. Mayo, Decatur, bead work; Miss Mary L. Smith, Decatur, wax fruit; Nancy Warren, Decatur, bead collars and jobs; Miss C. C. Mayo, Decatur, bead work; Miss Mary L. Smith, Decatur, wax fruit; Nancy Warren, Decatur, bead collars and jobs; Miss C. C. Mayo, Decatur, bead work; Mrs. John Wood, Alton, shell work; Mrs. E. F. Myers, shell wreath; Mrs. E. F. Lawson, Jacksonville, agricultural wreath; Mrs. M. S. Wheeler, Decatur, agricultural wreath; E. A. Ballie, Decatur, do.; Augustus Smith, Chicago, specimen raw silk. This was a most beautiful specimen of silk, showing the capacity for production of the State of Illinois, as a silk producing region, and best for the nation, but of cost. MAJ. GEN. SMITH'S MISSISSIPPI RAID.

The Fight on the Hatchie.

Federal Occupation of Oxford.

[From our Own Correspondent.]

CAIRO, Sept. 28, 1864.

It may be considered rather late in the day for a correspondent to write an account of an expedition which started over a month since, and which returned to Memphis as late as the 26th ult., but at the risk of being somewhat slow, I am going to hazard the experiment. Nothing has as yet been published to give an adequate idea of the latest raid of Maj. Gen. Smith's forces into the State of Mississippi. I have lately had the pleasure of conversing with an officer, who accompanied Gen. Smith, who is fully posted, and from whom the following particulars of the expedition have been obtained. I simply reproduce, in my own language, the facts taken down from this gentleman's account. Although not written by "our correspondent upon the spot," it is to be hoped the relation will be found fully as truthful as many war accounts which have been furnished to the daily press at the East and in the West.

THE START FROM MEMPHIS.

The battle of Tupelo had been fought, Gen. Smith and his forces had returned to the city of Memphis, there to repose their weary bones and recruit the flesh which had been worn away by scores marching and severe fighting. But they were fated not long to enjoy their ease and rest, not greatly to increase in corporosity. It was reported that Forrest and his rebel horde were ravishing and cutting up all sorts of didoes up about the vicinity of Oxford, Mississippi, much to the disgust of the residents and to defiance of the Union troops known to be so near them.

Orders having been given to that effect, Gen. Smith's force, consisting of the 1st and 2d Divisions of the right wing of the 16th Army Corps—Col. Shaw, of 14th Iowa, commanding the latter, and Gen. Mower the former—with Col. Hatch's Division of cavalry, belonging to the District of Memphis, and a brigade of 2,000 colored troops, under the command of Col. Edward Bouton, set out bound the last of August from Memphis headed toward Holly Springs.

Gen. Grierson had the general command of the cavalry force, consisting of three forces, cavalry, artillery and infantry, was and the supervision of the commander, Gen. A. J. Smith. Included in Col. Shaw's Division were the 14th Iowa, the 43d Illinois and 95th Illinois, all of whom had made themselves histories of no mean magnitude and excellence on the River campaign and other raids made by Gen. Smith since leaving Columbus, Ky., less than a year ago. But, perhaps, it would be better in this connection to furnish the official organization of the 1st and 2d Divisions so far as I have it.

GEN. SMITH'S STAFF.

The following comprise the Staff of Maj. Gen. A. J. Smith:

Major Rough, A. A. G.
Capt. Burns, A. A. G.
Lt. Brennan, A. D. C. M.
Lt. Hansott, A. D. C.
Lt. Pugsley, A. D. C.
Maj. Simpler, Medical Director.
Capt. Lyon, Judge Advocate.

STAFF OF 1ST DIVISION.

Maj. Gen J. R. Mower.
Capt. Sanford, Major.
Capt. Myer, A. A. Inspector Gen.
Lt. Mower, A. D. C.
Lt. O'Reilly, A. D. C.
Capt. O'Bonnel, Provost Officer.
Maj. Hough, Medical Director.

STAFF OF 2D DIVISION.

Col. W. J. Shaw, 14th Iowa, Commanding.
Prom. Gantenbein, Asst. Adj. Gen. 18,000
Battle of July 20th..... 6,000
" 22d..... 12,000
" 28th..... 5,000
" Aug. 31st..... 6,500

Total..... 44,500

Our losses in the meantime were about as follows, rather less than more:

From Chattanooga to Chattahoochee..... 15,000
Battle of July 20th..... 2,000
" 22d..... 3,500
" 28th..... 500
" Aug. 31st..... 1,500

Total..... 23,500

The first table does not include deserters who came in after our forces had crossed the Chattahoochee; and these number several thousand.

The Georgia militia, lately numerous in Hood's army have returned home, and reliable information assures me that the mountains are full of them, seeking safety. Of these killed in the battle of Jonesboro nearly all were veteran's of Hardee's corps.

There are now left of the rebel army about 22,000 veterans, and from 10,000 to 18,000 militia. These are now concentrated in Columbia, and for the fatigue of Sherman's forces, would, ere this, have been annihilated.

But Hood has been outgeneraled, to themselves the delusion that Hood's army will be allowed to recuperate. He can get no more men; and he is losing many every day.

RUMORS.

We have a series of rumors, from various quarters, but I put little confidence in them. We have it stated that Mobile has been captured; that our gunboats have gone up the river to within fifty miles of Selma; that Dick Taylor is on this side of the Mississippi, and that the people of Selma are rebuilding the railroad bridge over the Alabama. Another report says that Forrest has made his raid, and, in returning, upon a colony which carried him off to wed the Union belle of the day, was met by Gen. Grierson on Sunday, the 18th. On Monday he marched to the Hatchie, six miles farther on.

The troops had just gone into camp, not intending to cross the river that night, when they were vigorously attacked by Buford's division of Forrest's command, which had crossed the river at the ferry. As although one man were taken rather as a disadvantage, they came up boldly to the attack. Skirmishing, heavy, and after several hours of severe fighting, resulting in driving the Confederates, killing fifteen of their number, and capturing thirty, including Capt. Gordon, of Forrest's staff, who had a few days previous, where he had taken the oath of allegiance, a copy of which he had publicly signed and then forwarded by the hands of the rebel chief to whom he had all been conscripted from the country, but the conscripts were disconcerted and anxious to get home, but this they couldn't do while their families were within the rebel lines.

If they flee North, their wives and children will be left to starve, or be deserted for another as soon as from the rich; and this was held up even to wretched soldiers, as a terror; and right effectually did it operate. But now that there were safe their families was assured of protection, if they escape, they come into our lines by the hundred. This I know to be true. At least fifty per day pass through here, and many of the recruits coming in over half, perhaps, who come in—remain at home.

Of the losses in men, on the part of the rebels, I think the following table will be found nearly correct, it being taken from the estimates made by Gen. Sherman himself:

From Chattanooga to Chattahoochee.....
